

Allowing telephone monopolies to squash independent ISP would greatly damage the services provided to users that need more than the basic connectivity provided by companies like SBC, BellSouth, Sprint, Quest, etc. If de-regulated, these companies would surely use it to their advantage to force consumers to purchase DSL and other internet services directly from them, greatly reducing the ability for the consumer to choose the best service possible at a competitive price.